Bibliography of Books and Articles
Published by or about the Sisters of Mercy, 1831-2005

The following Bibliography is an attempt to list all the published books and articles written by or about the Sisters of Mercy throughout the world since the founding of the congregation in 1831 through 2005.* The Bibliography generally does not include works in the humanities, physical sciences, social sciences, or nursing sciences, except as noted in the Table of Contents. This list deliberately excludes unpublished manuscripts, theses, dissertations, sermons, conference presentations and lectures, and other unpublished works, and generally excludes published individual poems, sermons, book reviews, editorials, press releases, and short newsletter items. It may also inadvertently exclude published books and articles that have not yet come to the bibliographer's attention—despite an extensive search. Nevertheless, the Bibliography remains a remarkable testimony to the topic.

The Sisters of Mercy were not explicitly founded to do research or to write and publish books and articles, but to do the spiritual and corporal works of mercy, to relieve human misery and address its causes. Yet implicit in these ministerial purposes has, apparently, always been the perceived need to uncover, articulate, and share publicly the sources, history, and dynamics of these merciful endeavors as a necessary way to promote them. What is truly remarkable about this Bibliography is the evident and long-standing desire—on the part of the sisters and others—to remain faithful to the original inspirations of their founder, Catherine McAuley; to appreciate the ongoing reform and renewal which a knowledge of our history provokes; to probe in ever new and contemporary ways what the effective discharge of the works of mercy will entail; and to repeatedly uncover the scriptural and ecclesial sources of the mission of the Sisters of Mercy. Thus the Bibliography which follows represents not only the sisters' "faith seeking understanding," but the steady contributions to that understanding of sister-scholars, researchers, and writers, nearly all of whom were simultaneously engaged in the direct works of mercy, as well as the contributions of other researchers who have found the work or story of the Sisters of Mercy of scholarly interest.

As one peruses this listing, one will notice dominant themes and focuses as well as gaps where further or updated research is needed. Future editions of and/or supplements to this Bibliography may find these gaps generously addressed. This Bibliography will require annual Addenda—for books and journal articles published in 2006 and beyond and for pre-2006 entries that have been missed. We also recognize that other Bibliographies on other topics are needed—some day.
